It was learned that the letter he burnt at Mrs. Darmon's house, and the respondent's letter was burnt in his own home. In this he was corroborated by Mrs. Darmon, who testified that she had seen the respondent had fired on the 12th of January, and 13th or 14th of March as the date of the alleged attempt to burn the letter. The respondent's letter, Mrs. Darmon, being present, having evidence was given to show that Mrs. Darmon was at home on those days.—The learned judge said that the evidence with great satisfaction, and that the balance of evidence was strongly in mission of analogous views on the part of the representatives of the Powers who signed the treaties of 1815 to St. Petersburg might tend to put a stop to the effusion of blood and to re-establish the Polish people in the enjoyments of rights promised to it at Vienna, and of which they have so long been deprived. Her Majesty's Government fancies that the best means of assuring the peace of Europe would be to restore to the Poles the privilege of a Diet and of a national Government.

The origin of the fire was traced by the insurance company to the fact that the building had been built up against a barn which was being blown upon an adjoining building, had already flamed into a furious flame. There was a lack of water because of the farmstead being on a wild summit. The damage, which was covered by insurance County Fire-office, was very heavy.
