WHEN we began to advertise Ten Pounds of the Cheapest TEA in England for Twenty Shillings, we did not expect it to be a profitable speculation unless we created a great demand. It was a daring experiment that has received a favourable verdict from all sorts of people. We are glad to state it has increased our Tea Trade to such an extent that financially it has been a great success. Although we receive large numbers of Home-office Orders by every delivery, we still think if the people thoroughly understood their own interests, we should well see. Such confidence have we in the quality of the Tea, we offer to return the money should the Tea not please. We repeat a Post-office Order for Twenty Shillings will secure, carriage paid to any Address, 10lbs. of the Cheapest Tea in England. Orders to be made payable to

At a banquet given by the Lord Mayor, at the Mansion House, London, on Monday night, Mr. Goschen, in responding to the toast of "Her Majesty's Ministers," said: He must not linger on the topic to which the Lord Mayor had so kindly referred—those of education and the question of the poor notwithstanding that he was surrounded by many of his constituents. He had to return then on behalf of the Executive of this great country. The Lord Mayor had said, with great truth, that there was neutral ground. He did not represent one place in that of London, but the citizens at large, being trusted with the destinies of the nation, took a more active part in the discussion of the question. They had been about two sessions and had in office; they had tried to be industrious, and to confront these problems for the solution of which such deep disappointment as the exiles had suffered was the result of a vast amount of labour. They had entirely abrogated the attention of the Government and the country. And what had we to show? We had to buy back our army, which belonged at the time to the Emperor, and we had to pay for it (he laughed). It would cost us a large sum of money, but he believed the result would be adequate to the cost. He was positively to much content, and rightly so. There was glad that every action of theirs was jealous and narrowly scrutinised. They were prepared to accept the impartial verdict of the country, and they had been sorry to see that, whatever might have been the feelings of the moment or the criticism of continental writers, their policy in its broad features had not been called in question as having been other than honourable to the country which they had represented in such momentous times. (Cheers.) He had pursued a policy which was called one of isolation; but it had been, at all events, a policy of selfishness from beginning to end—hear, hear—and he believed there were many countries in Europe which would prefer the disinterested neutrality of England to the sinister action of some continental states. He knew the way in which the people of continental nations regarded the policy of England.

They would not believe in our honesty, and always fancied that at the bottom of our action the

They did not believe in our honesty, and they regarded that as the worst of our nation, the worst some Machiavellian designs. It was a first doctrine among continental politicians that the jealousy of the competitors of the French and the English colonies, and that we were favorable to Belgium because we were afraid of Kiel becoming a port of call for the German navy. These views taken on the Continent was that we had been on the side of France because we were afraid of the French competition that would be the German. He said most deliberately, that as regarded international politics, we were more honest and more single-minded than the French, but that the French had the habit of self-criticism in this country had reached extreme which was not at all understood on the Continent. People there believed when they were told that we were afraid of the French navy, or a gun that would not burst if an attempt was made to fire it, and they said that if English must be feared. It seemed to him that public opinion in this country was something like a greyhound horse out of condition, because it had been fed on greenmeat. (A laugh.) Recent events in Europe should teach us to rely—not on treaties for they were often scattered to the winds—not on alliances for they were occasionally faithless. The only treaty that had stood the test of time was the secret treaties were produced which shook the confidence of every honest politician—and upon ourselves; and he believed that in all essential points England was as strong in her progress, in her populations, in her constitution, and in every other respect except one—a diminished confidence in herself. (A roar.) Knowing that this was the situation, he should take measure of ourselves, that we should know what we could do, and that we would do it; we were called on; and that was to hold every year the same pageant, to maintain the honour and glory of England at the same height at which it had been held through many generations. (Cheers.)

FATAL ACCIDENT ON AN IRISH RAILWAY.—Tuesday evening the mail train from Dublin to London was derailed at Newry station, near the war, County Tyrone, by some carriages getting into the line. One passenger was killed, and others injured.

ATTEMPTED MURDER OF A POLICEMAN IN NEWCASTLE.—On Sunday evening a most unjustifiable outrage was committed on a policeman in Sandgate. The police officer, who is a married man, was on duty at seven o'clock on Sunday evening. Wm. Robert G. Folly, at the west end of Sandgate. constable escorted them to deist making a circuit, and to move away from the place; instead of doing this, they commenced a combative and noisy dispute, and the constable picked most unmercifully. He managed to gain feet again, and to draw his staff, but it was taken from him, and he was maltreated with great violence. His head and face were lacerated by his nose, cut his head and face in several places, and he was badly hurt. He was finally left prostrate and bleeding, and in a partial insensibility, and suffering acutely from the blows he had been subjected to. The people having assembled throughout the part in the usual manner, a period of the evening man named Hall, a well-known and popular person, and who was well respected as being a virtuous and principled man, on the chair in the affair, and he is now in the hospital, and is in a very bad way. It is said to be the most constable in the district, and the ultimate recovery of the people is very doubtful.
