An inquest was held on Tuesday afternoon at the residence of John Graham, district coroner, at the home of Mrs. J. H. Bennett, Fort Smith, Diction, on the body of Harrison, aged 67 years, who died at 11 o'clock on Monday night. It appeared from the evidence that Harrison lived with his son, Robert Harrison, at Hill Top, Diction. On Saturday afternoon, while in the act of leaving a mine, he fell down, and was picked up by his son, Robert Harrison, who took him to his home, where he died.

On board these were embarked 100 men, 177 mariners, 20 women (wives of the children); 556 male convicts, 197 female convicts, 100 free passengers, and 100 sailors; as well as Governor, his wife, secretary; and John White surgeon-general, who supplied and stock for the voyage. On 1 January 1788, after a long but prosperous voyage, they arrived at Botany Bay, where, however, forty of the convicts died.

At a meeting of persons interested in natural history in the city of Townsville after decided to form a Naturalists' Club. After discussion the Townsville Naturalists' Club was constituted, with Messrs. J. H. Fawcett, a native of Seattle, having the reputation of the best of natural historians in Australia, and those of zoology, botany, and ethnology.
