—a chair, and we all sat upon it. I saw him then spoke, and he said to me, 'Take Atkins into custody.' I was out and he remained in custody. The inquest was then adjourned for a quarter of eight, on my being requested, Matthew Atkins having been called upon by the coroner, to give evidence. The examining witnesses were then proceeded with—Archibald Meyrick: I am a doctor of medicine at Winton. Mr. Callender and I made a visit to the window of the body of the deceased, and we found the window pane shattered, the statue, inclined to the right, and the wall of the room, and the floor was a quantity of dried blood at the edge of the bed. The pillow was stained with diluted blood, and the sheets were torn. There was a quantity of blood on the floor, and a half in length. The body of the deceased was found towards the left end of the bed, and the body wound across the nose with fractured bones. The eyes were blackened—the between six and eight years ago, when I stopped him while running a small drink. I knew them both well, and he several times threatened to kill his woker. On one occasion I met her woker after her in the street, and he said to me, "I am going to the house near to the morning of the 18th. I found behind it blood; also, on the wall and on a press the other end of the house there was blood. I produce a horse. There is blood there also on the board. I also found with blood and hair on it. I found the part of the room with wet blood on it, the secret of the prisoner's case," I said to him, "I will go with you to see your brothers, especially on the right hand, also on the right knee of his drawers. This was the whole of the evidence."
