PLES: THE QUEEN OF C

Vedi Napoli, e poi mori" is the popular Italian saying which I should amplify before dying, see Naples, and not "See Naples then die," as is the general translation. And before dying see Naples, you say? Simply because that town is to me one of the most beautiful shall not say the most beautiful, of all the cosmic beauties in the world. To see it at its best so gain an idea of the beautiful, is to look at it from the deck of some vessel, lying at anchor, opposite to it, and personally perceiving it rather than per personal imagination. If the day be one of autumn's good creation so much the better, view an enchanting landscape beneath the grey of pleasant weather adds a greater pleasure to it, and long remembrance of a once beheld natural scene was the opportunity of the writer as a young man, when he was in the Grand Canal.

The Avoca left London on the afternoon of Tuesday the 15th of September, 1891, bearing a small, but very select, number of passengers, and after pleasant trip of four days and three-quarters, on of the smoothest of waters imaginable, passed to the conchant form of the lion of Britain's imperial prowess, to wit, Gibraltar, to another four days as above, in the Bay of Naples, doing the distance of 947 miles in 96½ hours, or an average speed of 9½ per hour, not a bad average for a vessel on her first trip.

mainland by a narrow strait and Cape Z between which and La Gajola is a well-sheltered bay at the north of which lies the city of Pozzuoli, an ancient Pausoli, a place with a remarkable history. The Emperor Nero granted it certain privileges at it the Apostle Paul landed on his way to Rome from the good ship Castor and Pollux. At it he found remains of the temple of Serapis near Marcus Gnaeus and Septimius Severus, and columns which attested the frieze around tions by shell-fish, showing the different character of the level of the water at various periods. From the temples of Neptune and the Nymphs are to be seen, as are also sixteen arches of the ancient city. Its cathedral, built by Lucius Calpurnius, stands on the site of the temple of Augustus. It was Puteoli that Caligula threw a temporary bridge across, about a half mile in length across the bay to Baiae. To the northwards of Pozzuoli Nooro (New Mountain), 456 feet in height, which appeared on the 30th of September, 1553. V. Pazzoli, on the opposite shore, lies a little village, all that remains of the once important mineral watering place of Bains, whose bay, it is said that, "Nothing in the world can be compared with its loveliness." Time works many changes; now the once splendid baths and villas of the Romans lie in ruins. The favourite resort of the nobles and the Emperor Nero, is now a desolate and almost uninhabited spot.

"Land of Venus, golden coast," Nature's fairest gift and bonnet Happy Balm."—Martial.

No more has worship been performed in her of Diana, Mercury, and Venus. The glory of disappeared. The end has come. In the ba-its eastern shore, lies the little rocky island of of which Horace says

"And he stood that crown
The Nealian Isle, deep rooted in the main, and where Brutus retired after he slew the "Cæsar." On the promontory east of Nidda remains of Secunda or Virginia (School of Virgil that Latin writer is said to have penned some works.
Behold from the deck of the Arcton a sight, a phenomenon seldom witnessed

What is the solution of this word section?

Naples, the pride of Italy, the pearl of the Mediterranean, the queen of so many cities. Words fail the enchanting scene, imagination cannot comprehend the view, supposition fails short, expectation is disappointed, a personal witness alone grasps the whole and is unable to describe all the beauties of the city, its towers, time and space forbids; architectural details and ornaments can only be admired in the present sight, and in Naples the eye can feast

Architecture in varied forms can be witnessed everywhere, from the quay of San Lucia, in the piazza of the Pubblica, to the Palazzo Royale, in the Via Roma; at the churches—San Francesco di Paola, San Grande, San Chiara, S. Domenico Maggiore, S. Anna de' Miracoli, S. Lycoprono, etc. The Museo Nazionale (National Museum) is a sight. In it we have a collection of frescoes containing many of the most valuable of the ancient wall paintings from the older temples of Heracleum and Paestum; also, the Museo di markable one of a dog, in a position as if it were with a rope around its neck, and underneath the "Beware of the dog" (beware of the dog), showing us of the days that dogs for guarding purposes are victims of the present and that the "Beware of the dog" of the doors of backyards and warehouses is nothing new; the Hall of Freedoms, Court of Inscriptions, of Sculptures, of Statues, of the Alaska, &c., Hall of Muses, where flourish the of astronomy (Urania), comedy (Thalia), el and memory (Polymnia), history (Clio) (Euterpe), heroic poetry (Calliope), love (Erato), &c., &c., under the care of their (Muses); the Bronze Hall; Hall Emperors; Cunean collection of vases, & François, one of which, from the house, evid a Jew from Pompeii, is interesting as represent biblical scene recorded in I. Kings, iii, 16 2

Museum's collection ought to gladden the hearts of all collectors, for upwards of 50,000 specimens are cabinetized in the following order:—Greek, Roman, Medieval, Modern, Dyes of the Old Nippon Museum and a fine catalogue prepared by Professor gives interesting particulars. A good number of library is also appended. The cabinet of gemstones contains some 2,000 specimens of carnelians, &c. while the library contains over 200,000 volumes and 4,000 manuscripts. The collection of natural history is South east of Naples lies the town of Roccapietra, which is good, some 3,000 being preserved, and some of which have been unravelled and printed under the supervision of Signor Fiorelli. The food comes from Pompeii is interesting, for amongst the things are bread, grain, meat, dried fruits, wine, oil, etc.

some 3,600 feet or more. Too new its summit is reached by a funicular railway 860 metres long, the highest of its kind in the world as recorded by the old Latin word novissima very interesting. The description of the crops and the climate of A.D. 79 is graphically described by Dion Cassius in his "Life of Titus," and by Pliny in his letter to Trajan. To the south of Vesuvius lies the city of Pompeii, the city of the dead, and a visit to it is one of the delectably full, interesting and instructive.

as may be had. Of an irregular linear form, it passes through the city walls entrances by gates—Marina, Stabia, Nœra, Sarno, Nola, Veuvins, and Herculaneum. Within the walls, portions already excavated are the Via Marina, the Via Abundant, Street of the Balcony, Street of the Angel, Street of Stabia, Street of Nola, Street of Fortune, of the Thermæ, of Mercury, of Sallustius, of Tomba. Of the buildings already cleared the Basilica, Temple of Venus, Forum, Temple of Jupiter, the Pantheon, Law Courts, Temple of Mercury, Hercules, Isis, &c., Tragic Theatre, Theatre, Stabian Baths, Public Baths, &c., and the Street of Tombs are the last resting-places of Lucius Labeo, Anagninus Calventius, Mammius public priestess, &c.

Alas! Alas! time flies and we must depart, the best of connections must cease. We must say

South of Positano lies, on the coast, the seaport town of Castellammare, and south west of it the town of Sorrento, the birth-place of Tasso, between the two places is a drive said to be one of the finest in the world, and the town of Sorrento is one of the finest, in Europe. Off Cape Minore, the southern extremity of the Bay of Naples, lies the island of Capri, about eleven miles in length.

"A gulf were Zephyr oft, with moonlight be Oppressed, descends to bathe his swart Translucent tresses

On fane submerged a bracher gleam Fair hamlets, streets with odours myrtles Ruined by processions grave with soulless
A light Olympian and an air divine—Naples! if these are blessings, they are thine
