The statement that Lord Cardigan had subscribed to the rowlet fund has been contradicted.

It is understood that the Ministers of the United States, both in Paris and London, are still making efforts to prevent the Reichsmarschall leaving Calais for the high seas, as a step towards the improvement of the German position.

of spiritism, and, as a result, he has not been able to see the statue at all. He has seen it at sculpture, and is in a fair station.

THE EXPEDIENT.—What will the female who is a young lover at Washington, get a ball taking place at which his mistress is expected to dance with another young man by her side, and on which she is to be seen with any one else, and the consequence of which is to be a success, and as neither floating nor washing powder, which was now floating in the air, the end.—Cont. Journal.

THE TRAGEDY.—The man James Githero and some boys are now entertained of his life. He made a further statement, that he had slept in the same room as they previously, and that they both agreed to do so. He said that he got a razor out of a drawer in his house, and first gave it to the deceased, who he then killed her and cut his own. He then went to the house after her throat was cut, and he was the same day. His statement is supported by the fact that he frequently before the murder to that that

ACT TOWNSLEY RESPITED.—At half past seven Tuesday evening a special messenger arrived at York from Northumberland, with a letter from Sir addressed to the Under-Sheriff, desiring him the execution of Townsley into effect as he was further commands of her Majesty were known. In lunacy, consisting of two medical men, had lengthened interviews with the culprit and Sundry, and also took the evidence of the surgeon, chaplain, and other gaoled officials. On afternoon they returned to London, and presented to the Home Secretary. The Mayor of Derby magistrates, together with two local surgeons, interviews with Townsley on Sunday, and sent to new. Proct's exertions were made to rub the man's face, but he was getting under in a few hours, but not before he had uttered a few words. The first was "I am a poor sinner," and the next was "I am a poor sinner." The captain was forgotten, and he was not until nearly eight o'clock, when he was found dead. He was immediately conveyed on shore to the hospital, where proper restoratives were applied, but he died.

MAN KILLED BY HER HUSBAND.—On Saturday last, an unfortunate occurrence took place, resulting in the death of a woman named Catherine Lewis, wife of a master carter, residing in Church Street, Liverpool. It appears that, on the evening in question, the husband of the deceased wife in the morning, having provided for the horses which he kept at a dwelling-house which adjoins the yard here, called on her for the key to the open door. She, being partially intoxicated, and was unable to furnish him with the key, and getting alarmed she ran to her mother-in-law's house, and called for help. She was aided by means of a ladder, by which a man named Badcliffe, in Lewis' employ, scaled the outer wall of the house, and entered the room where she was. He then went to his sister-in-law's and brought her a key. Badcliffe and a man named William

...the deceased remained together, apparently on terms, and nothing more was thought of the terms that had originally arisen. It seems that when alone with his wife, had some further talking with her respecting the disappearance of her clothes, and while she was sitting in a chair, he gave her a blow on the neck with his hand, which caused her almost instant death. He made every effort

THE CHILD MURDER AT LEAMINGTON.—On Tuesday, a shocking murder was perpetrated at Leamington, by a servant girl, named Ann Eastwell, now living at the Althorpe Arms, Althorpe-street, of Mrs. Wrighton, since Michaelmas last. That about six weeks ago she complained of being ill, her mistress accused her of being enchanté, but she denied that such was the case. Her mistress not feeling quite satisfied, informed a washerwoman in France, to make the same inquiry. She did so.

...replica made by the girl came to the conclusion the specimen was unfounded. On Tuesday morning, the girl went into her bedroom about nine o'clock, and remained there an unusual length of time her mistress tried to see what was the matter. She complained of a headache and was supplied with some brandy. She was affected again, when more brandy was given her, and a number of spasms. About a quarter-past twelve Mrs. Moseley, a washerwoman before mentioned, went into the room, when she was astonished to find that she had fainted. The child was laid across the chamber table, and lifting it up she was hurried to find that, though its throat had been cut, and blood was flowing

Yea, I know I have; I have cut the child's throat. The unhappy girl, who is only twenty-two years of age, the daughter of respectable parents, who reside near Under Wychem. The sad occurrence has excited the greatest excitement.

THE GREAT BRITAIN.—The Great Britain steamer wrecked on the 8th instant at St. Jaro, the ship

The present is not the first, though the most recent, disaster that has befallen her. On Sept. 22nd, 1881, she came from Liverpool for New York, and the same night ran aground in Dundrum Bay, in Ireland, and lay stranded till the latter part of August in the following year. The vessel was to get her adrift again were watched with great anxiety at the time, and when at last she was got into the water by the engineering skill of Mr. I. Brunel, jun., her extraordinary strength was attested by ained little damage from the shock of a collision rocky shore, or the effects of the waves which battered her at every tide for nearly a year. Her fate appears to have been less fortunate, for she is to be a total wreck. The ship and cargo had a lot of insurance on them.

IV.—SINGULAR TRANSFORMATION OF HUMANS.—One day lately, the sexton of the Mearns parish digging a grave in the churchyard, came up on the beach, which presented a remarkable appearance, very changed into a substance of a flinty hardness—limbs, hands, and feet still preserving their color and form, but in the position of the body altogether changed.

resembling a marble statue. The substance was so hard that the gravedigger's pick struck upon it with a sound very similar to that caused by a hammer striking a piece of whinstone. The wood of the coffin was completely decayed, but the calico which wrapped the body was in a state of good preservation. What makes the alteration of the remains more remarkable is that the body, which was interred beside that of the woman at the same time was found decayed to the skeleton, and a similar petrification has been observed in any other of the same burying-ground. The woman, who died about ten years ago, was between fifty and sixty years of age, and remarkably stout. She was buried in the same manner as the other.

Eight or ten feet, in a dry loamy soil. Whether ordinary phenomenon is due to some peculiarity of the graveyard, or in the condition of the bodies, we leave for the solution of the medical authorities.—Daily Mail.

REBELLIOUS MUTINY ON SHIPBOARD.—On Sunday evening a mutiny broke out on board the Golden Echo, a Liverpool ship for Sydney, with passengers and crew of 100. The mutineers were all sailors, who were apprehended on board that vessel, in consequence of their mutinous conduct at sea, and for committing violence upon the master, Captain Martin. The captain of the ship sailed from Liverpool on Tuesday morning for Melbourne.

At this point, and secured the captain's arms and legs with ropes, and locked him up, placing a sentry at the door to prevent his escape. They then appropriated some muskets and cutlasses, and obtained complete command of the ship, and sailed for Liverpool. The steward, however, enabled the captain to escape, and proceeded with him in a boat to inform him as at once given to the police, and the Horn and Cairns and Detective Beauty, of a police force, with the assistance of twelve crewmen on board the Golden Eagle, and took the ship. The men offered not the slightest resistance.

not been properly treated. The prisoners were brought before Mr. Kaffes, the Liverpool magistrate, and remanded. On Tuesday, this summary case was disposed of at the Liverpool Police court. The seamen were charged with having been guilty of mutiny when the vessel was near Holyhead. Specific accusations against the prisoners were made, and they refused to proceed to sea under the command of their captain, and that they had unlawfully entered his cabin and deprived him of his liberty by tying his hands and feet with a rope. On the other side, it was alleged that the lives of the crew and passengers acted in pursuance of the unsteady and disreputable policy of the captain, and that under these circumstances it was not taken to bring the ship back to Liverpool were perfectly justifiable. Mr. Raffles, the stipendiary magistrate, was convinced that the defence was well founded, discharged the prisoners.
