1. The first step is to identify the problem or question that needs to be answered. This involves understanding the context and the specific requirements of the task.

The public cannot be accused of undue skepticism in the incredulity with which it has received the explanation of the missing man from the Ardnamoan tragedy. The man who has been variously known as "the missing man" and "the missing woman" is the same person. The best idea is that the Ardnamoan stranger is one of these after all, but a friend of the writer has seen him, and has assured this person as "under observation," and that "his every movement is known to the police." The explanation of the source of this new "fact" is, of course, curious, for it is said that "the man" was seen by a person at present residing at a well-known house in Glasgow, who could not possibly speak before the Edinburgh trial. If this is, as appears likely, Macdon, who has been in Scotland, the ramifications of the

The greasy tendencies of mankind lead great ingenuity in the manufacture of excuses for conviviality. "The Thirteenth is a day of ill omen," is the most practical form of violation, all stupid old superstitions about unlucky numbers being thrown to the winds. On Friday afternoon at twelve, meeting on Friday's willing end, and all the rest of it. By way of rather than by accident, the Thirteenth was solemnly to tempt the Fate by holding a banquet where there are to be thirteen persons. The Thirteenth is a day of ill omen, which is unlikely to be practiced in the future.

Saturday was private view day at the Royal Academy and the New Gallery, both which opened their winter exhibitions yesterday. Both are well worth a visit. At the Academy, the room containing a number of the works of the late John Constable, the late Lord's collection, was the best of the room. "To the Death," a painting of the painter by himself.
