

the Exhibition, will eat up everything we have got," said a careful spouse to her husband. "Oh, no, they will not," he replied; "they mean to drink a toast."

to appear to represent Samuel Seale, a friend of the Duke of Devonshire, the Irish landlord. The Duke, however, stated that he was not Seale's friend and that he was not in London at the time of the trial. The Duke of Devonshire, however, stated that he was not Seale's friend and that he was not in London at the time of the trial. The Duke of Devonshire, however, stated that he was not Seale's friend and that he was not in London at the time of the trial.

lay the remains of the deceased and, indeed, nearly all were outside of their homes to witness the occasion, and a very deep and painful feeling seized every mind.

The experience gained by these extreme tests will doubtless be made available in the construction of the new gun of this description now nearly ready for service.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

own faith, and not to compel the assent
of other persuasions. — Lord BELHAVEN mendment, which was supported by the M

The Lordships adjourned at 7:40 p.m.

civil and industrial, as well as for the purpose of military service, that encouragement and aid should be given to the extension of the practice of gymnastic training for the motion, as vague, impracticable, and inconclusive. I suggested that no one would dispute the harmless

Sir G. GREY said the House had sanctioned the principle of the bill on the second reading, and it had been his stage, a measure which was perfectly one sitting, his Honour consented to adjourn day.

