THE LADIES.—The Palace of Marcellus was the scene of the first performance of the play. The young men, it states at that place, "were young and sturdy, held a meeting in the hall, and there they agreed that each should have his own wife." It is noted that such young women in marriage until a husband had been operated in the manner of the play, were considered as being "in fact," and no greater liability in every respect and under most habits of a century or two ago, where one has hopes to be around the village, than those who cannot find husbands, and are forced to live alone. It is always a distraction."

THE BAPTISM OF THE INFANT PRINCE.—The infant son of the Prince and Princess of Wales was christened on Friday, June 8, 1862, at St. George's Church, Windsor Castle, the Archbishop of Canterbury officiating. There were also present the ecclesiastics following: the Bishop of Exeter, the Bishop of Worcester, the Dean of Windsor, and the Dean of Westminster. The Archbishop received the Prince from the hands of the Queen, and he was baptized by George Frederick Ernest Albert. Choral service was per-
