

Mr. Santley has signed an engagement for the

Sir James Duke will not offer himself for re-

son. No contest is expected.

Man and Co. have just issued a people's edi-ing's interesting "Life of Father Mathew."
Daily Express announces the death of Sir
father of the north-east bar.

of Wales arrived at Marlborough House
eight o'clock on Saturday morning. from men, ex-Q.A., London, has appeared as men Theatre, New York, as Prior Laurence, and Juliet.

of the Crystal Palace have engaged Millie
for the whole of the coming Handel Festival. Beeve and Co., are preparing for publication, a descriptive catalogue of the works of Thomas and John herman, a niece of Major-General Sherman, is as an actress at the National Theatre, Cincinnati. She played Lady Gay Sparker, "insurance," and her performance is very well.

At Parma, a letter which is to be read in public at 8 p.m. On the 4th inst. he wrote another letter to the Bishop, expressing regret at his inability to be present, and concluded with the wish "that his immortality as her Dante."

in the same way as the male, and is suckled at an hotel; the female has just given seven reynards. At Bosham, in Sussex, a cerpan rabbit was dug out and thrown to a bringing up a young family; one of them to the family, and is now being suckled with worth Comm Whitworth; Nary Gazette, the views of that the report sion."

THE PILGRIM Society of Pa-

... moderate sum for a large crucifix of lapis with precious stones, which is to be made and presented to the Princess Dagmar, with an address of condolence.
Little, bound in gold, is being prepared for the Princess.

Much sympathy with the Princess Dagmar
at St. Petersburg.

And Robert Willis, was charged at the Worship
Court, on Monday, with attempting to murder
a woman.

The prisoner seems to have entertained a strong dislike to the woman.

Another letter has been published concerning the same scheme. He franchise "H

Turner, and on Saturday night last, beat his head with a hammer while he was asleep. The prisoner's life is in danger. The prisoner was WELLON OF THE EXCHEQUER AND MR. MILL.—The Exchequer desires me to acknowledge the communication relative to the candidature of Mr. Mill.

over a year ago an expedition set out from the exploration of Arizona. Among the

On this party were numerous ruins of ancient broken pottery is found strewn over all the Ancient forts, situated on the highest mountains, are numerous; and towns of are seen in almost every valley of note entire region of Arizona—proving that the ruled in former times by a better and more than the present tribe of Apaches.

Hall, Henry Williams was charged with assault on John Jackson, twelve years of robbing him of £4. Messrs. Taylor and Co., of Iron Works, have been in the habit of paying copper in exchange for gold from Mr. of the Crown Point Bridge toll-tax, and on between eleven and twelve o'clock in the fore-ing from the bridge with a bag containing pepper, he was suddenly assaulted by the picked him down with a ponderous iron weapon himself of the bag. The boy's screams attracted the attention of the cabman, named Wm. Green, a laborer, who pursued the prisoner, resistance captured him. He was committed next assizes at Leeds.
Jackson, a boy in the employ of Messrs.

McCann has been pursuing a hazardous occupation in Rock Country. It has been his practice to mine from the outside, after attaching ropes to the summit by means of a kite. A stack at the home of Messrs Williams, at Wednesbury Oak, during, McCann was employed to do the work which it has been usual with him to attach the sobriquet of "Steepie Jack." Com-day, he had affixed his apparatus by Sunday. At a public house, he ascended on that day, to the chimney and went through other antics on chimneys. At half past eight he descended, and retired to the public-house. After staying there he ascended the chimney, unobserved, it is said, afterwards seen lying asleep across the apex of the chimney. In another hour he was seen to roll from his perch and was picked up in a mutilated condition on the ground.

TRIAL.—A man named Briant, a shoemaker tried before the Assize Court of Paris on for an attempt to murder a married woman had kept up what is called a raison for some repenting of her fault, wished to break off

Miller, and Cooperatives, has four and a half days it is expected to take time. A new panic, has been stirred by Shirley Beaumont, the past few days have been, of [illegible]

"If blood was shed, life remained; and the horror you feel, you must remember was able to appear before you. Finally, if restrained now under the weight of the condemnation, let this contempt profit him when so much influence you should show him," said the Gazette des Tribunaux, the law courts, "exercised great influence of the law courts."

the jury, and a quarter of an hour's thought in a verdict of guilty, modified by a mitigating circumstances. The mitigation prisoner was sentenced to hard labour for has produced a striking picture in "Deer Ridge in the Forest of Fontainebleau," we attained the front of the platform before the herd snuffe danger, and now stands, erect stag, his shoulders raised by the of his fore legs, his head borne aloft, as a nostrils, and rakes his antlers like almost eyes fixed and his nostrils quivering. The stands beside the stag, his antlers raised lens, laying her ears backward, with a sound, as if to catch it; a second dog running, but more timidly than her counterpart, unsuspicious, drinks at a fence that runs as a heather of the foreground; the family lay several beautifully-painted fawns. The summit of a ridge of land that suddenly in the mid-distance and rises again in the

of high ground drawn along the horizon. The silences of the animals painted here caught Edwin Landseer look to his laurch. The garben of the picture are amongst its greatest charms. The sky is painted in a pale and tender blue, the clouds are borne high above the land, and them an exquisitely lined space that is nearly vapours, but rendered tender in colour by a veil, which softens but obscures not form.

THE EMIGRANT.—A crime morally little less heinous (says the Western Morning News) was committed in Plymouth Sound, and, unhappily, with the aid and active assistance of two watermen, a man and woman, well dressed, and in respectable positions in life, arrived at a Plymouth wharf from London, and occupied one bed-room each at a respectable hotel. The man, a about thirty years of age, the latter a person some ten years his junior. They went out together, the girl having the idea that she was to marry a partner, who, it was stated, had long been in Dublin by steamer. Their language was such as to lead the stoker Cumberlin, then lying in the hospital, to think they were engaged, and he has since having previously been put on board at the time and the pair shortly afterwards followed by the ship.

Bowden, wanted by the police, is a man of about twenty-five years of age, who is said to have been seen at the same place as her brother, and is believed to be the same person who was seen near the Arlington Street railway station, where he was convicted near London.

The same boat, one belonging to two stallions of the port, father and son, named Bransdriving alongside the Cambrian, the man arrived just as the steamer was about to start her trip he had left in the boat. He then hurriedly on the first time that she was not to accompany him, that in fact he was not going thither the Cambrian was the mail steamer bound for Good Hope, and that she would be away in half-an-hour.

"I was given half-an-hour," he told her to take ten minutes to make up her mind, and the portion of the piece of calico which she left, and she stated that she man, that she her out into the street, and she should go.

The surprise, and grief, and horror of the but faintly imagined by those who were not like cried pitiously to him not to desert his careless fellow was already up the ship's side, tumbled up in his cabin, was dead to her screams.

She would have followed him aboard, but the watermen were in the boat, grasped afloat, while the elder pushed off from the wharf.

be in the wrong of passengers and crew, of had presence of mind to interfere, even had, and in a few minutes the deceiver and the parted, probably for ever. The struggles and poor girl were indeed sad to witness.
