When Dorison left his room, he was alone. The door was open, and the light from the hallway shone into the room. He saw the old detective sitting at the desk, looking at a book. The detective looked up at him and smiled.

"You're back," he said.

Dorison nodded.

The detective closed the book and stood up.

"Let's go downstairs," he said.

Dorison followed him down the stairs. They went into the kitchen. The detective opened the refrigerator and took out a glass of milk.

"Here," he said, handing it to Dorison.

Dorison drank the milk. The detective sat at the table and looked at Dorison.

"What do you think about the case?" he asked.

Dorison thought for a moment.

"I don't know," he said.

The detective sighed.

"It's a tough case," he said.

Dorison nodded.

The detective stood up and walked to the door.

"Good night," he said.

Dorison watched him go. He felt alone again.
