

Of late years science had made extraordinary improvements in small arms, in artillery, and in naval architecture. Enormous expenses had been necessarily incurred by us in applying those improvements. He trusted that the North had not fallen behind in this respect. Here were produced the guns of Sir William Armstrong, and also born our Palmers, with their iron-clad frigates, had also been taking part in the great work of improvement, although it was improvement in forging weapons of destruction (loud applause). On behalf of the Volunteers, they would allow him to say that the highest authorities, not only in country is carried on, and the confidence of the people restored and attracted to the laws and institutions of the country. (Applause.) I will not, therefore, scruple to detain you for a short time in touching upon such topics as may possibly command from their patriotic importance, a portion of your interest. You, yourselves, gentlemen, in the invitation which you have honored me to come into this hall, active, intelligent, and flourishing community pleased to direct attention in an especial manner upon the subject that has been touched on by the Womans it if we look back over a series of years, and that this rule prevails—that for every ten persons added to our foreign trade, as the British labour, about a million sterling, a tenth or twelfth, never fails to come into the hands of the British people. And therefore, standing on that basis, and being enabled to show that ten or twelve persons have been added to the trade of this country since the Treaty of Commerce was signed, it is not only just, but is also justified in saying that, according to that treaty may in its indirect effects have benefited the British people, and their children, and which they have had, and gentlemen, I had that—well, I am sure, that the Government, for I do not see any party, for I do not see any party, which would condemn this, which would condemn this—strategist—but on some partial officials, some partial officials, some partial officials, franchise have been added to their applying for relief of these men has been not merely that they are deprived of it in

we earnestly trust that that long delay. (Loud cheers, almost for centuries—divided troubles of Europe, a bait and source of discord and a real and likely, united, will be, as merely the end and extinction but likewise will end a new Italy, united, will be, and will signal proof that constitution appreciated by the people, enlightening their understand that human wisdom can do

...the completion of that measure. But the Emperor expressed of the Emperor of old he did not share that admiration for, he desired that the strongest feeling of which he should prevail between the two countries be no sympathy at the Emperor's capital of Peking, yet he could not feel so oppressed the press and the Imperial applause and loud indications were willing to refer to another subject of which he knew there would be no sentiment. No member for a great could shut his eyes to the dangerous

government upon
he heard an ad-
the French ; and he shared the science and good-nature, and while
to make Paris
pet that the Em-perors of France, dissemi. He upon the ob-
no difference of commercial laws
taking place

W.
Frank
Thank
duty
The
I from
ther
ask ty to d see
to pro
ed no n act

[illegible]

...the works now being accomplished in river and on the bar, and that the right honourable ...man accepted the invitation. We suppose that

[illegible][illegible]

Garibaldi has sent the following letter to the of Stockholm:—

[illegible][illegible]

Price Medallist, No. 6606, International Exhibition 1882, has just published a most complete and correct catalogue of his manufactures, both in Argentine Silver Plate. It consists of 130 pp. Imperial 8vo. includes a full and carefully arranged price list, upwards of 530 engravings of articles of various kinds will be sent post-free by enclosing six stamps to Benson, 46 and 47, Cornhill, London, E.C.

