"The weary find new strength in generous wine,"
Heuer

No wine is so generous, so full of nutriment, good Port Wine. It seems, indeed, as if Nature aided by man's skill, had done its best to produce wine far above all other wines in richness of body, lovely colour, and elegant flavour.

WILLIAM GLENDINNING draws attention to this Wine, which is specially imported by him as the Wine most suited for those who are sick or recovering from sickness. Its characteristics are, freedom from acidity and heat, light flavor, richness in wood and richness of body with being heavy and sweet. Carriage paid upon half dozen and upwards.

 * What mighty ills have been done by women

Who lost Mark Antony the world?—A woman
Who was the cause of a long ten years' war!
And laid at last old Troy in ashes!—Woman!

Just so. A very pretty record of achievements, indeed, and if the breezes wafted last week from the Derwent fells are to be regarded as bona fide echoes of hamlet nomenclature, then is it evident that the sex are still plying their art as the sisters did before them. There was something bordering on the prophetic in my observations last week on the Mugglewick controversy. The more evidence of the weaving story, and I like that it would be worth the Editor's pains to see that the ammunition of an objectionable character was not brought into action. In saying this, I did not quite foresee the exact turn of events—least of all did I expect to learn that the ladies were the disturbing element in this little comedy in a country yard. The scribe speaks gravely of "the friends," and of the men in the Mugglesbury district as being on the very brink of that dreadful abyss—even ruin itself. Who would have thought that the sedate, unpretending men of the mo-anyone have thought that the wives of the bosoms would have been the presiding agents in the alleged malpractices. The old women were wont to sport through the neighbouring parishes on broom-sticks have long since gone the way of all flesh, and the secrets of their trade appear to have been buried with them. Notwithstanding this, however, it has just been recorded that the men of Minglewick are awayed by political government; and that, in short, the old dames compel their husbands to accede to all the Muggleswick matrons. They might allow the obedient lords a little of their own way, but ought to be remembered that some women so skilful in the art of leading that the will of the slave is quite obnoxious of the chain. To come to the point, the strength of a woman is not woman's forte; her strength lies in her weakness. That is a mystery, of course; there are not wanting evidences to attest its truth. Supposing, however, that there really is a coloring of truth in the story, what then? If the woman means of educating the heirs is the best mistress of the house will have a finger in the pie. I am totally unacquainted with the reasonabilities of the matrons in that quarter of the earth; but if their abilities in that line are on a par with the average Northumberland housewife, the result of their deliberations will not be of the order calculated to produce the evil consequences complained of. A man's wife is his best and true friend, and instead of exerting her influence against him, she should be his ally, and by her counsel, by counselling her lord to walk in the path of duty, she should be his true friend.

GIVING AND TAKING.

To work harmoniously together is one of the most commendable features in modern civilization. The present would indeed be a blessed world if all men do their best to make it so. But millennium is not yet. It is pleasing, however, to note that the brotherhood of man is widely sensibly. To live and let live is a text which although seldom preached, is practiced much more frequently than in former times. So much by way of speaking of this. Let us turn to the next subject.
