BULGARIAN SUBMISSION.

It is no exaggeration to say that all Europe experienced relief when it was announced that Bulgaria had produced a peace treaty, and that the six Great Powers, and had consented to withdraw from her aggressive campaign of Eastern Roumelia. It may seem strange that such a petty and insignificant State should be the cause of so much European commotion, but it is not so. Bulgaria, comparatively insignificant as she may be in herself, threatened altogether to upset that nice balancing of interests and forces which it was the object of the Berlin Treaty to effect. No sooner had the Bulgarians started on an adventure of aggression than the Servians and Greeks perceived to exact compensation—the former from Bulgaria herself, and the latter from Turkey. Thus the Porte would have had to defend its rights on two sides, while Bulgaria would have been attacked both in front and rear. The consequences of such an anomalous and complicated conflict it would be impossible to foresee; but the most probable result would have been the universal intervention of Russia and Austria, and the consequent restoration of peace and order, but with great risk of these Powers coming to hostilities between themselves, and the consequent ruin of the great and little Powers which had been drawn into the conflict to no one could pretend to predict. There was only one effectual way of avoiding all this international commotion, and that was to violate the Treaty of Berlin, and thus leading the reconsideration of its provisions by the Powers that framed it. The principle of that Treaty was that Bulgaria was to be a political power in the Balkan Peninsula, and that principle was necessarily infringed by a violent attempt to redress territorial arrangements. The principle of the Treaty was the withdrawal of Bulgaria from her aggressive attitude, and by her submission to the judgment of the great Powers on her claims.

OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENT.

LONDON, WEDNESDAY EVENING.—The public are beginning to get a little impatient for the decision of the Court of Arbitration in the case of the Bulgarian Prince. What Mr. Chamberlain is doing is to keep the matter before the public, and to keep the public back in mind, they are both like a good thing.
