

Story: Original and Select.
LONG AGO.

Two roses bloomed upon a tree:
The while leaves were green and every
I bent to gather one, while Rose
Plunged off the color-giving
"Woe things do to the heart," she
And death seemed approach
To take her own, "woe things do to the heart,"
To both for death to meet them both."

Lost Love! Dear Love! They come and go
The Summers with their sun and flowers,
They sing of love, they sing of love,
There is a light upon the hour,
Now is like the other, now is like the other,
That shows upon that golden weather,
In which she said those flowers were mine,
And death should be together.

THE SINGING WIRE.

Hark to that faint and fairy twang
That from the bosom of the breeze
He caught the rise and fall, there rang
Aolian harmonies.

I looked, and among the murmured chords
In random rhythm lightly flung
From that sweet throat, I caught the words,
And thus, murmured, they sang.

"I, messenger of many fates,
With all its strains of glad and woe,
Fine news that furth and publishes
With all its news of love."

"O, it is strange that I should wait
To leave me thus forlorn, and refrain,
When in the pine-top waken the gale
That hushes of coming rain."

Then to my soul came these gentle words
"Her heart has answered unto mine;
She comes to-night, Up! hush, O hush!
Most hark, no more repeat."

Maybe the fancy was false-hood,
And yet, my path, the breeze was true,
An earnest love, a hand was stretched
In that night to give me you!

And so, more dear to me than grown
That rarest tones that come from
The minor movement of that moan
In yonder singing wire.

Not care for the will of states,
Or might believe that smiles that string,
Since then so close it laid our hearts,
What time the bird took wing.

I listened to the branches please
That had aloft the breeze were;
I heard its wistful melody;
And stirred with sweet desire.

Yes, my love, that that I heard laid
Hast thou not said, "I will be true,"
Though so long, so long, so long,
Sure she may speak of love."

I listened, but it was in vain,
At first the mild old wayward will
Drew forth again the wistful wire,
That ceased, and all was still.

But suddenly some kindling shock
Struck feeling through the wire,
And on its screamed and flew, the flock
Rose with him, wheeled and whirled.
