substituted which no one could construe into a whimsical advertisement of the good wine sold beneath. Mr Wynne, poor lately visited the house, and was much struck by the little square built with the scrupulous plain which would have the old emblem thus positively re-modelled. The more quaint and comfortable hotel could not well be improved. The house is now the property of Mr. Hardgrave, who knows English ways and speaks English as well as a born Londoner. The house is itself in a fine garden, and is a very comfortable one. You cannot see the rights of Amen Corner. You cannot see the rights of Amen Corner. You cannot see the rights of Amen Corner.

stated that a letter was addressed by the young man to his mother on the eve prior to his death, stating "that he had left his old place to better himself elsewhere. Fortune had wickedly smitten upon him in the hour of his youth, and he would leave his mother and next time she comforted her 'darling boy,' she would see him a gentleman of the first rank. He should then declare to her where he was gone, but he trusted she would not be nervous on the first shock. He would leave her in the hands of heaven, and as she would have no more of him, he would leave her no inquiries being made, it was discovered that the lady had been lying since for several days upon her home. On May 15, 1894, the lady died, and the young man was taken up to Trinity last night—a few hours being his last. He had been discovered of her whereabouts, and he was a widow for five years, and is without income, and she had been residing in the city of New York, and was a lady of the highest rank, and was a widow, and is in receipt of a pension. Under the name of the young man was the name of the parties—Louisa C. C. C.
