operator, who at that time were little better than slaves, were from 15 to 18 cents per day. The speaker also alluded to the fact that the bill was introduced by the Tories, and cited by such men as Mr. Ferry, Mr. Fielding, and Lord Shaftesbury. (Cheers.) The speaker showed that Mr. Bright stoutly opposed this bill, and when charged in the House of Commons with having introduced a petition in favor of the Ten Hours Bill, the Tribune of the People confessed that, "At a time he did get up a petition in favor of such a bill, but then it was one of the acts of his boyhood, and he was not a man of his own age." The boyhood appeared to attach themselves to the mature age of the hon. member for Birmingham (Mr. Muntz). Believing as he did in his heart, the bill was most injurious and destructive of the health of the people, and he was bound to contrast to all principles of sound political economy.

Proctor, Louis Hartington and many others were not so sure. He said that "there is one line of demarcation between the Conservative and the Liberal Party, and that is the attitude of the Conservative Party towards the Jews." He said that he had not followed in Lord Salisbury's footsteps, and that he had not believed in Lord Salisbury's policy of "anti-Semitism." He said that he had not believed in Lord Salisbury's policy of "anti-Semitism." He said that he had not believed in Lord Salisbury's policy of "anti-Semitism."

that evening. (Cheers.) This might be a stretch of liberality on his part, for the Conservative party would preserve the building intact for the use of the Church of England. It is clearer whether the programme of the Liberal party meant spoliation and confiscation of the property of the Church or not. Those schools were built by the Government, as, also the church itself; and it maintained that it would be doing right and doing for disestablish and disendow the Church of England by taking away her rightful possessions. (Loud cheers.)

The report having been seconded by Lieut. Col. Glynne (who gave some useful and interesting information respecting Reform and Redistribution of Seats), it was carried unanimously; and a most harmonious and cheering closing was given by thanks to the Chairman.

the pervasion of panic was estimated that the Government had lost the confidence of three-fourths of Congress, comprising the bulk of the House and a large majority of the Senate, who would make prodigious use of the veto. The Government was thus in a very comfortable mood of dealing with water and fire.
